social determinants of health, inequities in health, epidemiology, and the interplay of research, evidence and politics in public health program and policy development and implementation. The second section of the course, Public Health in Practice, focuses on several areas of current public health practice. In each of these practice topics, the public health problem is described, stakeholders identified and suggested policy and programmatic responses are explored. One field trip is planned to expand learning on one of the practice topics.

C. INSTRUCTOR COURSE DESCRIPTION

Many UEP majors have an interest in policy, social justice, community engagement, and health. The Public Health field encompasses all of the aforementioned areas and more. This course is a forum to discuss and analyze core public health practice, emerging public health topics, determinants of health, and the intersection between politics and evidence-based public health practice.

D. COURSE OBJECTIVES
